British-Jap Treaty IS NOT IN HARMONY SAYS ENGLISH PAPER

LONDON, Aug. 11.—A joint declaration of the British and Japanese governments that the Anglo-Japanese treaty, which has just been permitted automatically to renew itself for another year, is "in harmony with the spirit of the covenant of the League of Nations," is challenged editorially by The Manchester Guardian. It is called as "a typical example of those partial and exclusive agreements between particular powers which the league of nations was designed to supersede."

The Guardian says: "Some people may be sceptical about the latest Anglo-Japanese note, but it is a most interesting and may be an extremely important document. The present Anglo-Japanese treaty dates from 1911, and will run, in the normal course, till July 1921. But the foreign offices of the two nations have remembered the covenant of the league of nations. They point out that the treaty, though in harmony with the spirit of the covenant of the league of nations, is not entirely in accordance with the letter, and they add that, if renewed, it will be in a form which is not inconsistent with the covenant."

"There is only one weakness about this statement, and that is that its opening proposition is entirely inaccurate. The Anglo-Japanese treaty in all its forms has always been entirely out of harmony with the spirit of the covenant. It is a typical example of those partial and exclusive agreements between particular powers which the league of nations was designed to supersede. It pledges each of the contracting parties to make war if by reason of unprovoked attack or aggression, or for other reasons, it is threatened in Eastern Asia or India."

The covenant, of course, provides an elaborate machinery by which the league shall deal with such aggressions and bring its collective powers to bear on the offender, whether he is or is not himself among its members. The Anglo-Japanese treaty, on the other hand, is a declaration of war in support of the league, and the league has definitely pronounced against an aggressor and ordered the enforcement of all its punitive measures contemplated in Article 16 of the covenant, which include military force but do not impose its use as an absolute obligation on all the members. The treaty would then be the protection of the league between us and war, and the obligations thrown on us by the treaty would be very different from what they are at present."

GUATEMALA ELECTION WILL BE RUN ON THE "SQUARE" THIS YEAR

GUATEMALA CITY, Aug. 11.—President Carlos Herrera has issued a circular letter addressed to all civil military officials throughout Guatemala notifying them that they shall not in any way use their authority to interfere with the coming elections further than to see that "order is maintained, that the rights of the voters are fully protected and that they are not molested in any way."

Hitherto elections in Guatemala, as in some other Latin-American republics, have been farcical. The Jefe Politico of the departments and their subordinate officials commanding the various districts of municipalities, when an election was announced, simply registered the names of a desired number of voters as voting for the designated candidate, and then turned them in as the electoral result.

During the 22 years Estrada Cabrera was in power there was only one presidential candidate and that was himself. On assuming office as president interino at the death of Reina Barrios, he was required by the constitution to convene elections for the presidential period of six years within eight days, said elections to be held within six months after his assuming power. Cabrera complied with the constitution in that he called the elections but did not allow any other candidate to be in the field.

Herrera, having been designated vice-president by the congress, as required by law, succeeded Cabrera as president interino, and in compliance with the law designated the last week in August for the presidential election. Besides Herrera, there are two candidates in the field, Jose Leon Castillo, who was obliged to flee the country upon being nominated as a candidate for president, and General Francisco Fuentes.

In his circular letter to the authorities throughout the country, president Herrera calls attention to his frequent declaration that it is his purpose, so long as he remains at the head of the government, "to adhere strictly to the principles of true democracy," and that he will not nullify or permit the nullification of the electoral rights of any voter.
